

Never recommend a homeowner clean up mold...

Mold is best left alone until it can be remediated professionally!

Disturbing visible mold conditions can set the spores airborne and migrate them to other areas of the house. You can not see mold, you will only see mold growth. And, sometimes what you see may only be the tip of the Ice burg.

When a homeowner disturbs mold, it can then be carried throughout the house by the typical air flow, through the duct system, or on your clothes. You then become the carrier!

Tearing out contaminated materials such as drywall or carpeting prior to containment procedures is the homeowners worst enemy...once airborne, mold will start to grow where it lands. And just because you removed the mold you can see, does not necessary mean you completely remediate the mold conditions. The air must also be treated and you just made it worse.

Remember, mold is best left alone until is can be properly remediated. Professional remediation is a combination of removing heavy growth, treating the contaminated surfaces, and treating or filter scrubbing the interior air.
